Taxes—The Public's Biggest Bill

By RAYMOND FITZMAHER

Although the next session of Congress is still months in the future, certain Senators and Representatives are already discussing methods of collecting a larger federal income.

Questions differ as to how the money shall be raised. Some members propose a new direct tax levied on the shoulders of a larger number of citizens. Others look to create public, or current, rates—dependent, of course, on benefits for improvement on business conditions.

A few propose meeting the problem by curtailing government expenditures. The American public would undoubtedly favor the plans of the last group. That is because the people realize from experience that all taxes, whether federal, state or local, ultimately come out of their earnings and savings; ultimately reduce their living standards; and the outside of their family market baskets.

They realize, too, that under these circumstances, heavy taxes constitute the biggest bill which the people, as a whole, are called upon to pay.

Many significant issues will confront the American people at the polling places this year. But of these some are important to some workers and earners than that new being raised by members of Congress—through the problems of heavy taxes and their effect on the family pocket-book, on recovery, and on re-employment.

And no candidate, regardless of party, could run on a platform more detrimental to the average American family than one which promised curtailment of waste of public funds supplied by the people through the surtaxes that heavy taxes entail.

For the people, as well as the candidates, know that high taxes and high cost of living are inseparable. And they want both held down to reasonable proportions.
