Those Little Green Globules

PEAS to you,—those little green globules which we are constantly discovering in the dishes which make life for summer. They pop up in paté-dish dishes, in light summer soups, in saucers to make fish taste better—almost anywhere you look, at this season of the year, you will find those little green globules.

So if you are planning to entertain this summer—and you'll want to do a lot of it while the salubrious are in bloom and the tables are laid—see that your shelves are well stocked with canned peas of various sizes. Serve the tiny ones as a vegetable, the medium sized peas in salads and serve the larger, less expensive size, in summer side and tender in soup.

Here Are Some Recipes

Omelette and Pea Salad: Beat sufficient egg whites to make two cups of the omelette. (Do not whip tender but not mushy.) Marinate separately for one hour, the omelette, one cup of canned peas and one cup of asparagus tips. Then lay lightly together the omelette and peas, and serve on a crisp lettuce. Arrange the asparagus tips around the omelette, garnish with mayonnaise. This serves eight persons.

Pea Caper: Press sufficient canned peas through a sieve to obtain one cup of pea pulp. Add one tablespoon melted butter, a few drops of onion juice and the following sifted dry ingredients: one-half cup corn meal, one-half teaspoon baking powder, three-fourths teaspoon pepper. Add one well-beaten egg yolk and fold in the stiffly-beaten whites. Drop by spoonfuls in hot deep fat (375-400 degrees) and fry until golden brown. Drain and serve with the most succulent, sweet potato or with white sauce. This serves eight persons.

Confidence—A National Asset

By RAYMOND FITZGERALD

In recent weeks the American people have been encouraged by various promises from Washington that steps will be taken to restore confidence in our national economy and our future.

Among these promises are included, for example, a cessation of attacks on the forces which promote production and employment, and a return to those principles of economy which would lighten the burdens of debt and taxation that now bear so heavily on the shoulders of all workers and earners.

To the American people the restoration of our traditional spirit of confidence seems a prime necessity. They realize, even if the politicians do not, that confidence is, in itself, a national asset, one more important than natural resources.

Confidence in the stability and the future of our production is so essential to the national progress and well-being as are forests, mines and fields. Without confidence, America could never have developed from a small group of seaboard states to the greatest and the most productive land on earth.

Without it, America could never have established the high standards of living and the inspiring record of freedom and well-being for her people that now distinguish her among nations.

That which destroys confidence therefore, destroys one of America's greatest assets. That which restores it, restores property and happiness.

America today has the resources, the skill and the energy to resume the traditional progress which recent handicaps have halted. It needs only confidence to go ahead. And this confidence must be based on more than the familiar and repeated promises. It demands action by Congress and the Administration to make those promises good.

If Washington keeps its pledge, if production is freed of its shackles, if the voices of hate and fear are silenced, then America can look forward to a renewal and a quickening of prosperity such as her natural wealth and the enterprise of her workers assure.

Today, the American people are poised on the brink and ready to go. What they ask is that Washington clear the track of obstructions, the borrowed theories and the political maneuverings that block the course.

What they demand is an ending of assaults on that spirit of confidence which in the past has been the strength and the hope of their nation.
