Soldiers Asked For More Mail From Home—In 1861, During Civil War

(continued from page 1) ferate government to provide all the uniforms, regiments bought their own cloth and hats, uniforms made by local tailors and seamstresses, augmented by clothing made by the soldier's family and friends. No matter how timely and valuable was this work, it resulted in miscel-

As the war went into the second and third year clothing became simpler and less diverse due to the increasing difficulties of the quartermaster. The cadet greg of 1861 and 1862 gave way gradually to the yankona brown dyes of soppiana and walnut baid. Confederate soldiers were rather generally referred to by both Yankees and Southerners as "butternuts."

Humors rolled wildly through all Civil war camps. In the South the men sat around campfires and the rumpers which drifted their way. One Confederate wrote his wife: "It is reported by a gentleman here just from Washington City that Abe Lincoln had been drunk for thirty-six hours and was still drunk when he left." And still more preposterous: "General Kirby Smith was in possession of Cincinnati, and Lincoln and his whole cabinet had been captured by Job Stuart."

Across the Mason-Dixon line the northern boys were also enjoying the deluge of rumor. One wrote: "We became so familiar with winter reports of an advancing enemy that little attention was given to these, except to see who could make the most exaggerated additions to them."

Cold figures which detail the much higher death rate from sickness in Civil war camps hide much. "Many of our noblest boys sickened and died during our sojourn in Missouri," wrote one Yankee soldier. Figures from the Southern camps were no better. For every soldier who died in battle, there were three who perished from disease. In both Yankee and

Confederate camps sick soldiers suffered from lack of attention throughout the years of the war. It was not uncommon for ill men to lie for hours in their tents or in vacant houses without food or water. These discomforts were reflected in the soldier's mail home and made their constant demands for more letters a necessity to maintain morale.

From where I sit...
by Joe Marsh
Sam Abernathy's the Chief Humor-Spiker in our town. If a stranger gets off something like "I hear they've sunk the S. S. Bumblebee," Sam starts pinning him down. Did he really see it? Where's the evidence? Because Sam knows, like the rest of us, that nine-tenths of the "inside news" passed around by careless folk isn't rumor—it's lies planted by the Axis to destroy American morale. Take these rumors about drinking to our Army Camps.

Actual, official facts from the government's own Office of War Information showed there wasn't a shred of truth to 'em. The boys enjoy a glass of beer occasionally—same as a lot of us do. And from where I sit, they're proving themselves the healthiest, best-disciplined bunch of fighting men in history, like the OWI report stated. That's good enough for me.
